Subject: Microsoft Settlement

I believe the terms of the Microsoft settlement are quite fair and in fact require Microsoft to disclose information to competitors that could give them a leading edge in competition. My understanding of the free enterprise system is that it fosters an environment for superior products and innovation. I don't believe that marketshare should be achieved through legal maneuvering but rather by producing superior products that the consumer wants. Perhaps Microsoft's competitors should spend more time, money and effort developing innovative products that can compete in the marketplace rather than squandering their resources to on legal battles to make Microsoft look bad.
